PISTONS AND PARASOLS

Pyramid Hill on Display as part of the Loddon Valley Arts Trail

A fascinating look at local history will happen this Sunday 4 October from 10am - 3pm - in McKay St at the Pyramid Hill Historical Society and Museum - and the Community Centre!

Our award-winning Museum will be open all day for visitors to see the amazing array of local vintage and antique objects, and to chat to some of the Museum volunteers about the stories! The artefacts of interest will continue across the road to the Community Centre, with a curated collection of vintage fashion accessories, and digital display of 100 year old wedding photos.

The sound of chugging engines will add a nostalgic touch as a reminder of early pioneering days as they are cranked back to life in the Museum carpark.

This open day, is a great introduction to the history of Pyramid Hill, and will offer an insight into the diversity of items in the Museum collection.

The Museum is open on Tuesdays, and by other days by appointment. It will be a rare treat to be able to view this amazing display on a Sunday, with all the visitors to town journeying around as part of the Loddon Valley Arts Trail!

Pistons and Parasols will be a fun event to take the kids AND your grandparents along to! You never know what you could discover.. so go along and find out..

Inside this edition: October is Seniors Month! Lot's of fun activities advertised this Edition - including Loddon Valley Arts Trail, Hat Burning and Painting workshops at Neighbourhood House; Birchip Cropping Group updates; Vale Ernie Miller; Future Farming Workshop; Terrick Terrick Weekend, Last Days to get a photo in to Millers calendar comp!!

Neighbourhood House News

Hi Neighbours!

Can you imagine it's been 5 years this week that I have been working in Pyramid Hill! Time is flinging by at a brain scattering speed.. We have achieved a fair bit in this time - but now we have a new workshop space - I feel we are about to do more and more and more! Check out the workshops we are doing in October!

In other news - our most famous employee Dr Ziggy is very very very well, .. in fact almost too well. I can't put in writing what she murdered last week, in case Brett the Policeman is reading this column and the confession sends us both to jail.. To all Jack Russell owners who read this - we should start a Support Group.. the white hair.. the disobedience.. and the murders.. what were we thinking when we said we would take them on?! See you at Mount Hope on Sunday?

There's a LOT on this weekend - with the Loddon Valley Arts Trail, Terrick Terrick Weekend, the Gunny Cup.. and the Bendigo Orchid Society seasonal show. One of the most interesting I think, is the Creativerse - a Children's Art and learning Festival in Bendigo - check out the website here! <https://thecreativerse.org.au/>

Pop in for a visit next week! Kim

Harvester clinics set up farmers for a big harvest ahead

With hopes of a promising harvest ahead, growers are turning their attention to fine tuning their harvester set up. There is a minimal room for waste in modern farming, with input prices soaring, every bit of grain in the bin makes a substantial difference.

BCG recently delivered GRDC Harvester Set Up Clinics in Bridgewater, Terrick Terrick and Ultima, giving growers the opportunity to fine tune their machines ahead of harvest.

GRDC Research indicates grain losses in Australian farming systems can be significantly higher than the commonly targeted two per cent, with estimated losses of:

- Wheat: 2 per cent
- Barley: 4.5 per cent
- Canola: 3.2 per cent

For example: A wheat crop yielding 4 tonnes per hectare and valued at \$360/t: $4 \text{ t/ha} \times 2\% = 80\text{kg}$ of grain lost per hectare. Across a 1,000 hectare wheat program, that equates to 80 tonnes of grain. At \$360/t, that represents \$28,800 in potential lost income in a 1,000 hectare wheat program.

Grain loss is only one part of the profit equation when it comes to harvester set up, and the clinics demonstrated the range of factors growers can adjust to improve overall performance.

Growers worked directly with the different machines brought along to the clinics, including John Deere, Case IH, New Holland, Fendt and Claas harvesters.

Sessions covered measuring grain losses, reducing front losses, feeder house set up, threshing system configuration, cleaning area adjustments, harvest weed seed control, safety and more.

BCG staff member and Woomelang farmer Joe Collins said some of the key takeaways were challenging the common perception that slowing down is always the best way to reduce losses.

“If the header is set up correctly, you can potentially travel 1km/h faster while still maintaining grain quality and minimising losses.”

A key focus was understanding and configuring your particular machine, and knowing how to get the most out of it. Mr Collins was surprised just how closely you have to look at every part of your machine.

“I learnt you need to start right at the header front and work your way through, looking at everything sequentially to where the grain travels. Knife, feeder house, concaves, sieves, just to name a few. I’m guilty of adjusting one component and calling it a day, rather than looking at the machine as a whole.” Mr Collins said.

With crops expected to be heavy in many areas this season, making small, measured adjustments regularly will be important. The GRDC Harvester Set Up guide recommends adjusting settings in small increments, including:

- Concave gap in 1 mm steps
- Rotor or drum speed in 50 rpm steps
- Ground speed in 0.2 km/h steps
- Fan speed in 40-50 rpm steps in tougher conditions
- Fan speed in 20-30 rpm steps later in the day

These adjustments can be used to establish benchmarks for different times of the day, allowing growers to quickly fine tune their machines as crops and conditions change.

As always, you can only manage what you measure.

For more information and resources to help prepare for harvest, visit the GRDC website. Factual information sourced from the GRDC Harvester Set Up Guide.

Strong season sparks drought resilience conversations at BCG Main Field Day

More than 500 farmers attended BCG's Main Field Day at Curyo on September 9, where an unusually wet season provided a valuable opportunity to consider how cropping decisions hold up when conditions change.

With soil profiles full and crops carrying strong yield potential, much of the discussion centred on making the most of this season. But the questions extended well beyond harvest: which varieties and sowing strategies offer flexibility, how can growers use available moisture efficiently, and what can a good year teach them about preparing for a dry one?

Meteorologist Jane Bunn opened the day by unpacking the weather and climate patterns shaping 2026. She explored the gap between forecasts and what growers had experienced in their paddocks, then looked ahead to the risks that could still affect the season's finish, including frost, heat and a possible turn to drier conditions.

Those themes carried into the paddock. Across 28 trials, growers and researchers examined crop varieties, soils, nutrition, weed control, yield potential and farming systems. Soil pit sessions gave attendees a closer look at the soil profile beneath this year's crops and prompted discussion about the role of soil resources in managing seasonal variability.

Cereal sessions explored how variety choice and sowing time influence flowering.

Crops that flower too early can face greater frost risk, while those that flower too late may encounter heat and moisture stress. Understanding that balance helps growers make decisions before they know whether a season will be wet, dry or somewhere in between.

"The main research site looked spectacular," BCG CEO Fiona Best said. "With some variety trials up to our hips in height, reflecting significant yield potential, the mood was one of optimism which added to the great discussion throughout the day."

Ms Best said the strong season gave growers a chance to examine both opportunity and risk.

"A year like this shows what our farming systems can achieve when moisture is available. It also gives us a chance to ask what we can learn from the trials now that will help growers make sound decisions when rainfall is less reliable," she said.

The annual field day brought farmers, researchers and industry together to compare local research with experience from their own paddocks. That exchange is central to drought preparedness: building knowledge and options before difficult seasonal decisions have to be made.

BCG's Main Field Day was funded through the Victoria Drought Resilience Adoption and Innovation Hub, supported by the Australian Government's Future Drought Fund. The event helped bring locally relevant research to growers and strengthen the connections that support farming communities through changing seasons.
